

THE CONCERT THAT WASN'T

We were all looking forward to hearing the quartet from the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra but unfortunately, they had to postpone at the last moment, because one of the quartet members, had been in Brisbane, so that person had to self-quarantine for 14 days. The date for a future concert is in the pipeline. So, all those with tickets will still get a chance to hear the quartet in the not-too-distant future.

But on a more cheerful note – The Mini Golf is once again up and running. When I was down there on Sunday afternoon, it was doing a roaring trade. Not only do Mike and Alison operate the Mini Golf, which has had a much-needed spring-clean, but they also sell things like Jigsaws, Boogie Boards, hats, handbags and much, much more. They have also invested in a great mural on the side wall. Which brightens the place up no end and gives the whole place a big lift.

It is such a shame that COVID-19 has struck again but we know that these “hot spots” will be with us for some time to come and bringing with it all the usual restrictions which we all thought we had seen the last of. No doubt masks will be with us for many more months as well as the unwanted restrictions.

However, we beat it once and we can do it again. We will even put up with the restrictions and the wearing of masks until it is safe to not wear them. This coming Saturday 16th January the Music Club is hosting another event, featuring Mark Waugh, tickets, which cost $30 can be purchased from: www.trybooking.com/BNUTE. You can BYO drinks and nibbles, but because there will need to be allocated seating you need to email sandypointmusic@gmail.com with your seating requests.

Also, hot off the press, the quartet from the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra hope to be performing on Sunday 21st of February at 2.30pm
